Trip Overview

Bokta Peak Climbing (6142 m) is a popular trekking peak in Nepal's Kanchenjunga Conservation Area, known for its natural beauty and cultural significance. The mountain is named after Mount Kanchenjunga, the world's third-highest mountain, and is untouched by time. The trek takes in diverse land topography, forests, and villages, with opportunities to see snow leopards, red pandas, musk deer, and various bird species. The trail passes through high altitudes with less vegetation and rocky terrain, crossing Mirgin La Pass and experiencing panoramic views of Mount Makalu, Chamlang, and Everest. The glacier of Kanchenjunga offers an incredible close-up view of the mountain. Climbing Himalaya offers a package for climbing Bokta Peak, including logistics, transportation, accommodation, and a professional mountain guide, at a reasonable price. The trek culminates at the base camp of Mount Kanchenjunga at Pang Pema, followed by a return trek to Suketar.

The trek to Suketar is filled with diverse landscapes and breathtaking views, making it a truly unforgettable experience. Along the way, trekkers can also immerse themselves in the rich local culture and interact with the friendly Sherpa people. This trek is perfect for adventure enthusiasts seeking a challenging yet rewarding journey in the heart of the Himalayas.
